Gig Review

Review: Any Louder?

Venue: Salisbury Arts Centre

This was yet again a great event, with upcoming bands Ebony Sky, Small Town Rivals, Electric Contradiction and the headline act Amy Can Flyy. Ebony Sky were supposed to be a mixture of Paramore and Avenged Sevenfold but some of the time I thought it was more Paramore than Avenged Sevenfold but then they would surprise the audience by suddenly playing with a heavier beat which kept people interested.

Small Town Rivals have a fresh take on the indie/rock genre which really works for them and sounds incredible to listen to. They sound like a mix between Two Door Cinema Club and The Vaccines, and their music was more light rock which was a refreshing change from the heavier Ebony Sky.

The third act to grace the stage at the Salisbury Arts Centre was the amazing Electric Contradiction. They had a playful mixture of electronica, rock and acoustic dance. All of their songs had something different going for them, and it certainly had people dancing and singing along.

The last and possibly most anticipated act finally came to the stage. Amy Can Flyy and one of the funniest intros I've ever heard. Cheeky but cheerful, it was definitely different. Amy Can Flyy has quite a pop/dance sound to them that just makes you want to move. There were a few sound problems at the beginning but this was quickly fixed whilst the audience was entertained with playful banter. Throughout the performance they made people laugh, and everyone danced and sang along, which made a great atmosphere.

All in all it was a great use of £6, and was enjoyed thoroughly by all. Keep up the great work!
