Review: Water

Venue: Salisbury Playhouse

Date: 21 January 2011

Reviewer: Olivia Johnson

A thought provoking play highlighting the effects we are having on our environment, global warming and the rising of the seas, intertwined with the relationships of the central characters.

The acting is superb, each actor taking on several parts transforming easily from one character to another and each character totally believable. The addition of sound effects some of which were done by the cast added to the experience, along with the stunning special effects from beginning to end. At one point we are transported to the bottom of the ocean. Fantastic!

You cannot fail to be riveted to this play. I strongly recommend that you go and see it.
