On the 30th of September Salisbury's very own City Stereo performed at the City Hall with support from bands – Things Behind the Sun, Caught in the Crossfire and Middlenamekill.

Things Behind the Sun were first to perform and they were great. I liked the style of music that they played which was indie/rock/pop. Even though they were first to go on they got the crowd's attention and were a very good opening act.

Next to perform were Caught in the Crossfire. I only got to see the last few songs of their set but I really enjoyed their performance. I have seen Caught in the Crossfire before and I love how confident they seem to be when performing. I still love the lead singer's voice because it contrasts so well with instruments as she has quite a high voice. From what I saw it was a really good performance.

The third act to perform was Middlenamekill who were an older band and listening to their overall sound you could tell. They seemed really confident in what they were doing which in my opinion makes shows a whole lot better. They had a different sound to the other bands but I think this was good because it drew in a different crowd.

Last to perform were City Stereo. It's amazing seeing these guys because their stage presence is hilarious. They're all over the place but that's what makes it so fun. You can help but dance along to their pop/rock songs.

Overall it was a really good gig. I wish gigs were like this more often because it had a really friendly atmosphere and I really enjoyed it.
